The Collector’s Edition includes the fully illuminated text of The Helianx Proposition, four DVD’s, glossary, and a commentary providing added narrative dimension to this cosmic fable.

This creation myth explores the deeper symbolic meaning of the traditional Christian Garden of Eden scene and what the Serpent was doing there. As the creature’s impact was apparently so profound, the tale suggests that the Serpent had a divine origin and a valuable function to perform.

Over 20 years were spent illustrating the story. It is exquisitely produced and designed to last many generations. There will also be elements of considerable interest to the contemporary cosmologist which will add insight into the persistent presence of dragons, snakes, and rainbow serpents in the stories we have told ourselves over the thousands of years of human history.

This first of five volumes of diaries and letters covers the years leading up to Harold and Martha Sherman's move to Chicago to join the Forum that received the Urantia revelation. It covers Harold's successful writing career in New York and Hollywood, their great friendship with Forumite Harry Loose who introduced them to the Urantia concepts, their relationships with Sir Hubert Wilkins and other notables of the times, and their introduction to and correspondence with Dr William Sadler, the custodian of the revelation.

This book is the second of a five-volume series detailing Harold and Martha Sherman's involvement with the Urantia revelation. "Revelation and Rebellion," takes place in 1942 and records the Shermans' first flush of enthusiasm for the revelation and the events that culminated in the first major conflict among Urantia believers. It provides a far more informative account of this troubled period than that found in Harold's 1976 book, How to Know What to Believe. From the back cover: "There is a book to be written eventually in which all these matters may be brought forth. ... I might suggest that you keep some sort of diary for future reference.." This volume, Aftermath of Rebellion 1943, documents a full year of Urantia-related activity as witnessed by Harold and Martha Sherman and described in their diaries and letters. During this year the Shermans continue to attend the weekly Forum meetings almost without fail and to record their recollections soon afterward. Feeling unjustly blamed by Dr. Sadler for the so-called rebellion the previous autumn, they share their frustrations with their few friends in the Forum, and confide their growing doubts about the Doctor's trustworthiness as custodian of the Urantia papers. Their closest confidante remains Harry J. Loose providing advice and instruction through long, frequent letters.

In this volume Harold and Martha Sherman report their Urantia-related experiences for the years 1944 and 1945. During this period the Forum hears the papers that became Part III of the Urantia Book, and the Shermans record their impressions of each paper as well as their discussions with Forum friends on these and other subjects. No longer in the forefront of controversy, the Shermans quietly maintain their criticisms of Dr. Sadler's handling of the papers. However, a frank meeting in late 1945 with Harry Loose's close friend, Reverend Williams, causes the Shermans to reflect anew on their involvement with the Urantia project, resulting in a "turning point" of sorts.

“Thomas Jefferson, in these letters to Americans and the citizens of the world, is as always a radical and visionary idealist. He is also outraged at contemporary America. Yet, his assertions are in the end even more shocking for their spiritual optimism. On matters of the human soul and spirit, his thinking has evolved well beyond where he is remembered historically. He is also writing to us cognizant of our future as follows:

America means love.

The word American means love.

It is time, at last, for Americans to know that meaning, and not a moment too soon.

Mr. Jefferson has returned for the year 2008, a critical election year to reawaken and revive the ailing soul of America.” ~ from the Foreword.

This is the first book to utilize state-of-the-art oceanographic research and display technology to depict an actual underwater site for Atlantis. These high-resolution maps were created especially for this research and show the Levantine basin and Cyprus Arc in high-resolution detail for the first time. Using sophisticated computer programs, these maps and models utilize data obtained from the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration that were released to the public only a decade ago. The data was obtained in 1987 during a scientific survey of the northeastern Mediterranean Sea (Cruise 5 of the Research Vessel 'Adademik Nikolaj Strakhov'), conducted by the Geological Institute of the Russian Academy of Sciences with the collaboration of the Geological Survey of Israel.

While matching all the clues of the physical site, Sarmast ranges into other disciplines to achieve a match with nearly every one of the 50 clues that Plato lists. The matches he has made with Plato's clues extend from the philosopher's claim that elephants once lived on Atlantis, to the mineral composition of the island, to mythological figures associated with the legend.

Regarded as having taught the most to those with whom he spoke the least, nevertheless his words have informed the imagination of individuals from every world religion, and as well, those seemingly without a religion. In this volume, the 'teachings' of Jesus described in the Urantia Text are presented as they were elicited within the context of dialogue while he "passed by". The focus is upon a brief scene description followed by the dialogue including questions and answers that are referenced in an index of topics sure to be of interest to those reflecting upon the purpose of life.

The Press is one service project of the Daynal Institute whose work is to foster exploration of the spiritual counterpart of advancing material knowledge and temporal wisdom. As such, the scope of the Press could include work in any subject area but will focus upon subjects germane to cultural formation especially those considered part of the Humanities and Social Sciences. However, as the role of technology is of central importance to the tools we use to extend the dialogue in any field of inquiry, the Formal and Natural Sciences are essential to realizing the goal of exploring the full range of facts, meanings, and value implicit in the perennial question of “who are we” to have named ourselves homo sapiens or ‘the wise and knowing one’.

Otherwise, the Press is a web-integrated endeavor embracing the Internet as the primary distribution network and Open Source applications as the most effective tools for creative collaboration. Consequently, while the Press makes provision for the physical production and distribution of discrete media products in various text, audio, or video formats for purchase through resellers, these resources are likewise found freely available in the Nordan Corpora that is a body of work integrated with all related material featured on the World Wide Web itself but a local extension of the circuitry that is our shared endowment of cosmic mind.
